

Billing and Invoice Guide - Invoice access

Owner: Billing Operations | Audience: First-line support | Version: 1.1

Scope. Use this guide for invoice availability, billing-contact corrections, and general payment-status questions. It does not authorize first-line support to disclose payment details, change payment ownership, or promise a financial outcome.

Invoice access. Account owners can download invoices from Settings > Billing after payment is successfully captured. Verify that the requester is an authorized account owner before discussing invoice availability or correcting a billing contact email.

Missing invoice procedure. Ask the account owner to confirm the billing period, organization name, and whether payment shows as completed in the Billing page. If payment is pending, explain that the invoice becomes available after successful payment capture; do not provide a guaranteed completion time.

Information boundary. Do not share invoice amounts, payment method details, transaction identifiers, or billing-contact changes with an unverified requester. Do not change account ownership from a standard support ticket.

Billing and Invoice Guide - Restricted requests

Restricted requests. Payment disputes, unfamiliar charges, chargebacks, refund requests, tax corrections, and requests to change payment-method ownership require Billing Operations review. Support should record the concern and route it to the appropriate queue.

Required internal context. Capture the workspace name, requester relationship to the account, billing period, the customer's stated concern, and any invoice reference they voluntarily provide. Preserve the original ticket wording and do not ask for full card data.

Communication boundary. Do not promise a refund, acknowledge fault, disclose payment details, or make account changes in a customer reply. Billing Operations confirms eligibility and communicates the formal outcome.

Priority rule. Treat a chargeback or an unfamiliar-charge dispute as sensitive. Use the internal escalation path even when the customer is calm and the relevant invoice was retrieved successfully.

FAQ. A customer asking where to download an invoice is a normal support question. A customer disputing whether a charge is valid is not; it must be reviewed by Billing Operations.
